

CAP comes cheaply

FOR fees of as little as R1 a month, Woodstock's Community Arts Project (CAP) is offering instruction in music, dance, painting and other disciplines to children enrolling for next year's classes.

CAP has announced it is expanding its Children's Arts Project classes which commence in February next year.

The programme includes classes in Creative Encounters, arts classes at CAP and in the townships, and Creative Movement and Dance classes.

Creative Encounters are a departure from conventional arts classes. Employing a holistic educational approach the classes are aimed at promoting a positive self-image, increasing creativity and facilitating problem solving.

These classes will only be for primary school children initially and include such disciplines as dance, music, drawing, painting and clay modelling.

CAP is also offering Saturday morning art classes aimed at encouraging self-expression through drawing, painting and modelling. These classes will cater for children from age five to 17.

Creative Movement and Dance classes for children who express themselves more fully in this sphere are scheduled for the second half of next year.
