

The Community Arts Project centre in Chapel Street, Woodstock, holds its open day from 10am to 4pm today in an effort to raise desperately-needed funds. Art exhibitions, musical recitals and drama performances will be the order of the day. Three members of the project proudly display some of the work completed at the centre. They are, from left, Kiskey Sijila, Cameron Voyiya, and Gilo Maguma. ● Report, page 4, Picture: Peter Stanford

Art open day is sure to Cap it all

Staff Reporter

THE Community Arts Project (Cap) centre in Chapel Street, Woodstock, is holding its open day from 10am to 4pm today to raise funds. Art exhibitions, musical recitals and drama performances will be featured.

The art on display will include sculpture, painting, photography, graphics, posters and silk screening. These and handicrafts produced at the Cap centres in Crossroads and Nyanga will be on sale to the public.

Piano recitals by music students will begin at 11.30am, followed by a play staged by the children taking drama classes at the centre.

The aims of Cap are to stimulate art in the Cape Town community. Cap is funded by donations and the project holds classes for children and beginners in a variety of areas in art.

Cap, which is multiracial, has more than 300 active members and has succeeded in obtaining bursaries for three of its students to study in Italy. Some their work can be viewed today.

Members of the public interested in making donations, or who have any inquiries, should contact the Cap centre at ☎ 45-3689.

CAPE TIMES

03/12/83